SESSIONS VISITS US-MEXICO BORDER

1 U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions traveled to the U.S.-Mexico border on Tuesday to make his case for increased prosecutions of illegal immigrants, pressuring U.S. attorneys to prioritize cases against criminal migrants. Sessions, a longtime proponent of tougher immigration enforcement, told U.S. Customs and Border Protection agents at the Port of Nogales, Arizona, that more illegal migrants should be prosecuted as criminals. It is normally the role of the Secretary of Homeland Security to meet border agents. But Sessions made the visit to highlight his focus on enforcing federal laws as dozens of U.S. cities try to shield illegal immigrants from stepped-up prosecution and deportation efforts. REUTERS

N.KOREA WARNS OF NUKE STRIKE IF US PROVOKES

2 North Korean state media warned on Tuesday of a nuclear attack on the United States at any sign of American aggression as a U.S. Navy strike group steamed toward the western Pacific. President Donald Trump, who has urged China to do more to rein in its impoverished ally and neighbor, said in a tweet that North Korea was "looking for trouble" and the United States would "solve the problem" with or without Beijing's help. Tension has escalated sharply on the Korean peninsula amid concerns that reclusive North Korea may soon conduct a sixth nuclear test and after Washington said at the weekend it was diverting the aircraft carrier strike group Carl Vinson toward the Korean peninsula in a show of force. TRUMP PROMISES REVAMP OF WALL STREET RULES

3 President Donald Trump told a group of chief executives that his administration was reducing regulations and revamping the Wall Street reform law known as Dodd-Frank, which might be eliminated and replaced with "something else." "We're going to reduce taxes, we're going to eliminate wasteful regulations," Trump said at a meeting attended by corporate leaders and members of his cabinet. Last week he said officials were planning a "major haircut" for the regulations. "For the bankers in the room, they'll be very happy because we're really doing a major streamlining and, perhaps, elimination, and replacing it with something else," Trump said. REUTERS

WAL-MART CONTINUES CUT OF CORPORATE JOBS

5 Wal-Mart Stores Inc. is eliminating more corporate jobs this month, the Wall Street Journal reported on Tuesday, citing people familiar with the matter. The latest round of job cuts will involve "hundreds" of positions in Wal-Mart's international and technology businesses along with its warehouse chain, Sam's Club, according to the report. Wal-Mart's job cuts started in 2016 when the retailer said it was eliminating 7,000 back office positions and moving more of its workforce to the sales floor. Earlier this year, Wal-Mart cut 1,200 corporate jobs mostly in human resources even as it continued to invest in its e-commerce operations. Wal-Mart did not immediately respond to a Reuters request seeking comment. REUTERS

Experts see correlation between rise in STDs and popularity of dating apps

Young people have more STDs than ever before, says CDC.

ERIN TIERNAN
@ErinTiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

Over 1.5 million people dated last week thanks to dating app Tinder, according to company stats.

It's hard to say how many of them took it further than first base, but public health officials say one thing is certain: Dating apps are quickly becoming the primary way partners connect.

The rise of online dating has correlated with another more disturbing trend: STD rates are also very much on the rise in the United States.

The total combined cases of chlamydia, gonorrhea and syphilis reported in 2015, the most recent year for which data are available, rose to the highest numbers ever in the U.S., according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

In two of three cases, the increases hit double digits: Syphilis cases increased by 19 percent, gonorrhea by almost 13 percent, and chlamydia by nearly 6 percent compared to the prior year.

When you add herpes and HPV to the mix, the CDC estimates as much as one-third of the U.S. population has an STD at any given time.

The hardest hit? Young people and gay men.

"We have reached a decisive moment for the nation," Dr. Jonathan Mermin, director of CDC's National Center for HIV/AIDS, Viral Hepatitis, STD, and TB Prevention, said in a statement. "STD rates are rising, and many of the country's systems for preventing STDs have eroded. We must mobilize, rebuild and expand services — or the human and economic burden will continue to grow."

Health officials in several states and at least one study have pinpointed internet-assisted dating as causing a 15.9 percent spike in reported HIV cases. The 2014 study, "Internet's Dirty Secret: Assessing the Impact of Online Intermediaries on HIV Transmission," looked at data in 33 states from 1999 to 2008 and concluded Craig's List personal ads were to blame for the increase.

"Our study results suggest that there is a new social route of HIV transmission that is taking place in this digital era," the report says.

STD rates among Massachusetts residents trail national averages, but just barely, and Kevin Cranston, the state Health Department assistant commissioner, called the Bay State's rise in STD cases "very concerning."

The rise of dating apps like Tinder and Grindr is concurrent with increases in reported cases of STDS, Cranston said.

"It's arguable dating apps are a cause, but whether it leads to more sex, anonymous sex or condomless sex is hard to answer," he said.

Requests for comment to Grindr and Tinder were not immediately answered Tuesday.

Charlie Baker reigns again as most popular governor in America

Gov. Charlie Baker's bipartisan approach is one reason his constituents approve of the job he's doing. GETTY IMAGES

How's the weather up there, Baker?

Gov. Charlie Baker is back on top, leapfrogging over his counterparts in North Dakota and Maryland to again claim the title Most Popular Governor in America, according to a national poll released Tuesday.

The Morning Consult poll asked 85,000 registered voters across America to evaluate the job performance of their governors from January 2017 through March 2017, and Baker reclaimed the top spot after falling to third last fall.

The survey showed 75 percent of voters approve of the job Baker is doing as governor, with 17 percent disapproving and 9 percent reporting no opinion of Baker's job. Baker's 75 percent approval rating puts him two points higher than Gov. Larry Hogan of Maryland, whom Morning Consult compared to Baker.

"Both governors have reputations as shrewd, bipartisan dealmakers who value results over party purity, and their constituents seem to appreciate that style," the poll organizers wrote.

Baker, during his tenure in the governor's office, has emphasized his belief in bipartisanship, rarely tying himself to partisan standpoints. Last session, he worked with Democrats to pass major bills dealing with renewable energy, opioid addiction and pay equity. This year, he vetoed legislation granting pay raises to lawmakers and statewide officeholders, mostly Democrats, but did not object to the legislation during its path to passage and did not mount an aggressive campaign against it.

On Monday, House Democrats, showing a rare level of comfort with the state's top Republican officeholder, authorized Baker to implement an assessment on employers to pay for public health care and opted to let the governor work out the details of the plan.

In September, 70 percent of Massachusetts voters polled by Morning Consult approved of Baker's performance, 18 percent disapproved and 11 percent had no opinion. In that poll, he had been supplanted by Hogan and South Dakota Gov. Dennis Daugaard.

Baker has plenty of company from fellow Republicans on the popularity totem pole, as the 13 most popular governors in the country are Republicans.

But the GOP tent also includes New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie — whom Baker endorsed for president before Christie dropped out and got behind Donald Trump — who on Tuesday was named America's least popular governor. In the Garden State, 25 percent of voters approve of Christie's performance while 71 percent said they disapprove of his work.

The least popular Democratic governor in the country is Connecticut's Dannel Malloy, a second-term executive who has a 29 percent approval rating and 66 disapproval rating, according to Morning Consult. The most popular Democratic governor is West Virginia's first term Gov. Jim Justice, according to the poll. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

The Alpha Delta fraternity near the Dartmouth College campus inspired one of the writers of the "Animal House" movie. GETTY IMAGES

New Hampshire top court upholds ban on 'Animal House' fraternity

The frat was accused in 2015 of branding pledges with the club's letters.

New Hampshire's top court on Tuesday upheld a lower court's decision banning the fraternity that inspired the movie "Animal House" from living in its house near Dartmouth College campus after the school decertified the group for branding its members.

Dartmouth officials revoked recognition of the Alpha Delta fraternity's charter in 2015 after an investigation concluded that members had branded 11 new pledges with the club's letters, as part of an "overtly condoned and long-standing practice."

That decision suspended the exemptions in local laws that allowed the 12 to 18 members to live in the fraternity house, and prompted officials in the town of Hanover, where Dartmouth is located, to order the house shut down as it was in violation of local zoning laws.

The saga evoked the 1978 comedy "National Lampoon's Animal House" starring John Belushi in which an angry university dean kicks out an unruly fraternity. The story for that film was inspired by one of the writers' experiences being initiated into Alpha Delta.

While the fictional fraternity takes revenge on the university by unleashing a custom-made "Deathmobile" to wreak havoc in the school's annual homecoming parade, the real-life fraternity sued Hanover.

It argued the town had no jurisdiction over its house, which it said dates to the 1840s and was "grandfathered in" as housing for students of the Ivy League college. A lower court rejected that argument, setting the stage for review by the state Supreme Court.

A Dartmouth spokeswoman said the school was "pleased" that the top court had upheld the decision. An attorney for the fraternity did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Universities have increasingly become intolerant of rowdier fraternities, linking them to problems including binge drinking and sexual assault on campus. For their part, fraternity organizations argue that they provide valuable student housing, leadership experience and promote charitable giving.

Janet Jackson is about to be even richer post-divorce

Janet Jackson's husband — well, soon to be ex-husband — is rich. And now, Janet Jackson — who isn't doing too bad herself — is about to get richer. Allow me to explain.

Details are emerging that Jackson and Wissam Al Mana have split; and it looks like the pop icon could get as much as $200 million from her divorce. The two reportedly separated because of Al Mana's controlling ways, and ultimately, cultural differences. I can assure you, it's not about the money. Well, not primarily.

Page Six has the dirt — according to a source, the divorce from the "filthy rich Qatari businessman" would make the 50-year-old Jackson even richer under the terms of her prenup. Al Mana, who owns the imaginatively named Al Mana Group, has vast holdings in cars, real estate, retail, tech and other ventures. "She was entitled to $100 million if they stayed married for at least five years … The prenup also calls for that $100 million payment to be doubled if they have a child." But a long-time security guard for the Jackson family says even though it looks like a grab for money, it's not. It's mostly about how Janet Jackson probably isn't the wife type. "She's never been in a relationship too long … Marriage doesn't agree with her. She doesn't agree with marriage."

The Richest estimates that while Al Mana is worth $1 billion, Jackson is worth "a mere $150 million," which is like, $150 million more than anybody I know is worth.

Chris Evans gives Tom Brady a pass

Chris Evans has been very vocal about his distaste for Donald Trump's presidency. When Trump was elected, the conventionally attractive and very sensitive dude-bro found the power within himself to express how he felt in 138 characters: "This is an embarrassing night for America," he wrote. "We've let a hatemonger lead our great nation. We've let a bully set our course. I'm devastated."

But Evans, like so many other white men who star in Marvel-based franchises, is not perfect. So the "Gifted" actor told USA Today that if anyone should be excused for voting for Trump, it should be Tom Brady. I'm sorry, what now?

"I know actors get grief for having their opinions shared," the 35-year-old said. "That's not going to stop me from expressing what I think and feel." OK, fine. But what else, Evans?

"We may have political disagreements. But I don't want to encourage this landscape of, if you disagree with me politically, you're my enemy. That's not the case. That's easy to say as a privileged white male." Ooh, buzzwords! He must know I can't resist when a man attemps to reckon with his privilege. "I'm just going out of my way to give Tom Brady a pass. He gave me five rings. What am I supposed to do? He gets a pass." Oh, honey, no.

Brady — who is the kind of man who has a baby cockroach named after him — reportedly thought it would be "great" if Donald Trump was elected president. He also participates in a sport where players suffer multiple concussions and head injuries throughout their careers. So, uh, what's Chris Evans' excuse?

Jemima Kirke was a 'problem drinker'

Despite attending rehab programs, Jemima Kirke — better known as Jessa Johansson on HBO's "Girls" — doesn't consider herself an addict. Instead of using those vices as a way to repress her feelings, she uses and recognizes them as tools. Why didn't I think about that? Kirke opened up on the podcast "Recover Girl" about her relationship with alcohol and why she doesn't think the word "addict" suits her very well. "I didn't relate to [AA's] psychic need for the alcohol," she said according to E! Online. "I recognized it as a tool, and I know how to use it as a tool. … It's a problem more than addiction. I just was a problem drinker and user, and I liked to party," the 31-year-old said. Ultimately she was kicked out of both rehab facilities she attended, with her therapist there telling her she always played the victim. And while I don't want to belittle Kirke's experience at all, I am tempted to make some sort of sarcastic comment about a person who stars on "Girls" exhibiting entitled behavior. But I won't! Besides, I think most of us would love to be able to get away with calling a booze-induced night of shenanigans just a casual night of just "usin' my tools." Color me jealous.

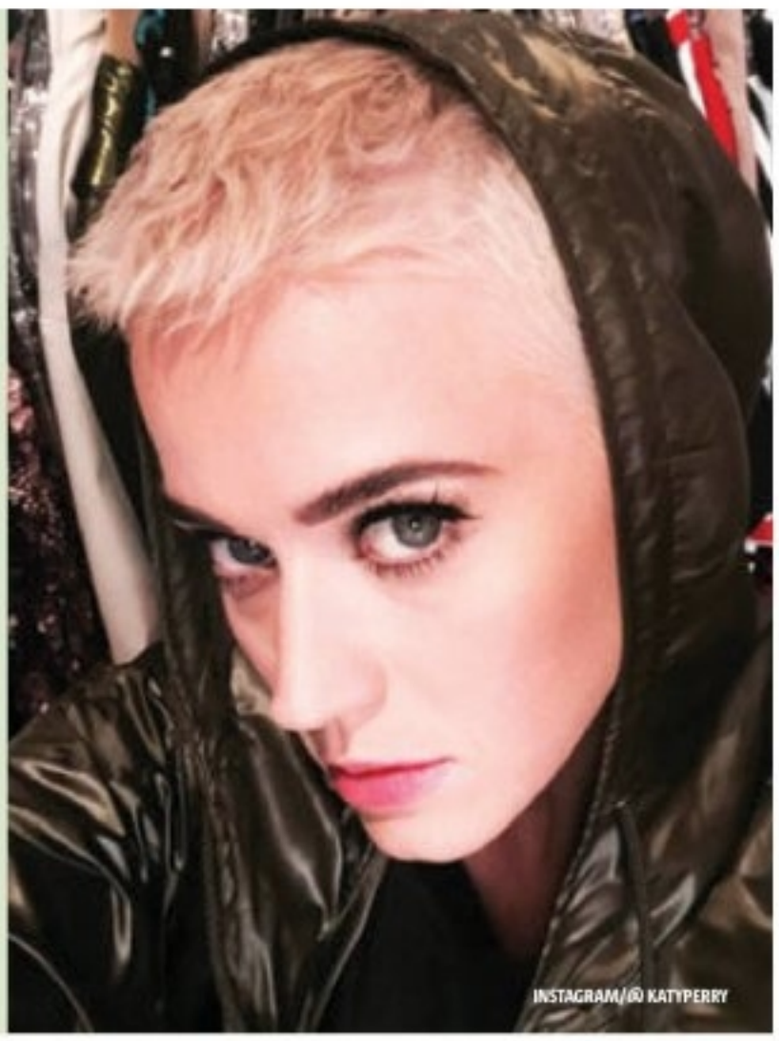
Katy Perry cuts her hair again

Katy Perry would like very much to get in on this cool trend of having a platinum-blond shaved head, and won't you guys let her into the club, please?

The pop star, who is definitely not dating Reese Witherspoon's ex-husband, is getting in on 2017s hottest trend: shaved and platinum. Amber Rose did it way back when. Then Kristen Stewart. Then Zoe Kravitz. And now, Perry. Because she just wants to be one of the cool kids, OK?

The 32-year-old made a comment at the Grammys earlier this year, debuting a shorter platinum look, saying, "It's the last color in the spectrum that I can do. I've done all of them, and the only thing left to do is shave my head." People thought she was shading Britney Spears, but I guess she was just shading herself. Superfun!

Perry was definitely giving early era Bieber vibes at her last event, so this is a welcome change, I guess. And now she can sit with the popular girls at lunch, which is an added bonus. Good for you, girl!



Anna Chlumsky: Amy is better off without Selina

In "Veep" Season 6, our favorite enraged staffer goes west.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Anna Chlumsky plays the most intense and quietly hilarious character on "Veep": Amy Brookheimer. The steely-faced, seething right hand woman to Selina Meyer (Julia Louis-Dreyfus) powers through each day in Washington with a death stare and a mouth full of zingers, providing comedy in her repressed rage.

But a few things have changed in the world of the HBO political satire, which airs its sixth season on Sunday, April 16. At Season 5's close, Meyer loses her presidential bid. She and most of her staff depart Washington, pursuing new callings a safe distance from Meyer's web (except for her personal aides Richard Splett [Sam Richardson], and Gary Walsh [Tony Hale], the latter who has become even more fawning postcampaign, helping Selina fill her newfound downtime with late night games of backgammon).

Our girl Amy gets as far away as she can, heading to Nevada with fiance Buddy Calhoun to run his campaign for governor. But neither the location change, nor the advancing romance do much in the way of mellowing out the wound-up workaholic.

"Her Nevada trip and her Buddy trip are very much a, 'Wherever you go, there you are,'" says the Chicago native. "She's still very much herself, with all of her baggage and venom, it's just channeled differently. I don't know if the desert is the best place for Amy," she jokes.

The 36-year-old Bushwick resident chats with us about "Veep" vs. real-world politics, how the show reads differently since the 2016 election, and whether Amy and Selina will find their way back to each other.

Anna Chlumsky plays Amy Brookheimer on "Veep." Season 6 airs Sunday, April 16 on HBO. HBO/LACEY TERRELL

Do you see Selina and Amy reconnecting?

Personally, I definitely think Amy's better off without Selina. [Laughs] They're certainly enablers of each other's professional addictions, as it were. We find out pretty quickly that they kind of can't stay away from each other. Even in the first or second episodes, they've kept up this kind of adorable phone relationship.

A lot has happened in the real world of politics since we left off with "Veep." Does the 2016 election work its way into Season 6 at all?

It doesn't, just in that, it's a math problem: Our show is not live. Not in the sense that "The Daily Show" or "Saturday Night Live" can see what's happening in the news and then talk about it that night. We started writing it summer last year and shooting in September; there were maybe two months of shooting postelection, but the season was already written.

We satirize politics in its most generality. We like to just explore how ridiculous people behave when faced with power dynamics. That plays out in a political realm and in personal politics and that's why I think it can be timeless and so relevant and why people can relate to it.

So many "Veep" storylines have ended up predictive or eerily relevant. Viewers have been trying to compare Selina to Hillary forever, and now, with Selina losing the election and navigating life post-Washington, it's even harder not to.

That's certainly the viewer's prerogative. We had a debacle with State Department gifts once, and that certainly was inspired by a Hillary moment. Everything is rife for satire. Sometimes there is a gaffe on "Meet the Press" that shapes policies; sometimes there are hostage crises that you have to keep under wraps; sometimes an administration is dishonest with an intelligence committee! [Laughs]

We have an election episode this year, it was eerie, we were actually shooting it during the 2016 election. The disreputable candidate pulls ahead, and we were like, 'Oh my God, I can't believe this is happening!' If you deal enough in the stories of politics, they come back to haunt you. [Laughs]

Selina's incompetence, moral insensitivity, political incorrectness — do you think the humor of that will be read differently now that we have a joke in office?
What's different now is people can't help but buy into our cynicism. In the beginning of our series, that was one of the critiques people would have of the show: "People aren't like that in politics." And we'd always be like, 'Are you kidding?' American culture was still idealizing its politics when we first began. I think the lid's been way blown off by what's happened. I certainly think that our tone is way more accepted at this point. Of course, those in the know and with any brains always accepted our tone. [Laughs] Now everybody's in on it.

What would you hope for Amy's future? How can she live her best, most Amy-ful life?
[Laughs] It's a great question, because she's just so unhappy. I think her dream would be to be the undisputed boss. She just wants power and for people to stop disputing it. She just wants to be winning all the time. She could be the CEO of a super successful, fast growing company. The problem is she's addicted to politics, to the game, and I think that's what clouds her judgment when it comes to Selina. It's like, just go somewhere else, do something else! I do think it's an unhealthy addiction for her. Honestly, she was the happiest when we met her — she was a year into being the Chief of Staff [to the Veep], and that was kind of her peak. She's just been falling since then. [Laughs]

GETTY IMAGES

Do you feel akin to Amy at all?
You can't be with somebody this long and be completely removed from them. There are certainly parallels all around, as far as what she's going through as a female in [her] 30s, like, "Where do I belong? Am I on the right path?" Personalitywise, she does not suffer fools easily and that's something I've got, too. [Laughs] I believe everybody has a brain, but when they act like they don't, I'm just like, "Stop it!" That's something I've always had in common with Amy.

Defending his life

Legendary filmmaker Walter Hill doesn't think his controversial film "The Assignment" is transphobic.

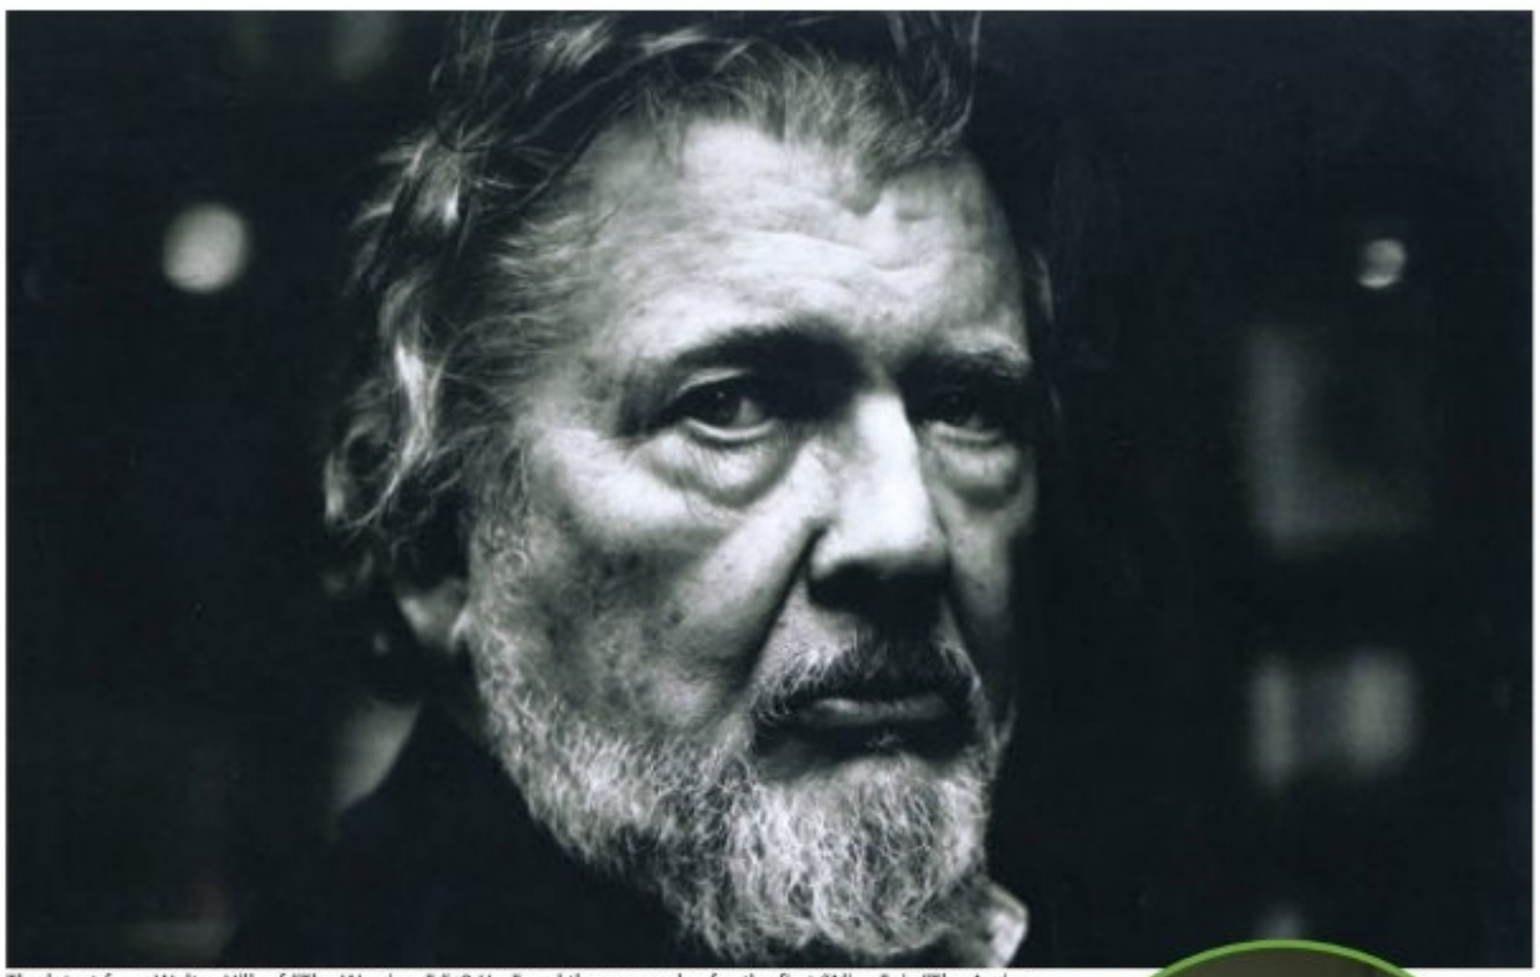
MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Walter Hill knows "The Assignment" is controversial. Since premiering at the Toronto International Film Festival last fall — hell, even while it was being shot — the latest from the legendary filmmaker ("The Warriors," "48 Hrs.," also "Deadwood") has been a magnet for outrage pieces, which have accused the film of being transphobic.

The plot? Michelle Rodriguez plays a very macho and very male hit man named Frank Kitchen who's kidnapped, drugged and surgically given female parts by a vengeful mad scientist (Sigourney Weaver).

Hill didn't go into "The Assignment" to attract scandal. For him, it's just another of his lurid potboilers, not a commentary on trans people. Besides, technically its anti-hero isn't even trans. Frank may have swapped gender parts, but he still identifies as male.

"I don't think it has anything to do with that subject," the 75-year-old filmmaker tells us. When the pitchforks first came out, Hill was asked to issue a statement. He declined. "I just said, 'The movie will be my defense.' And it is. Although I guess I'm conducting a defense at the moment."



The latest from Walter Hill, of "The Warriors," "48 Hrs." and the screenplay for the first "Alien," is "The Assignment," in theaters and on VOD. NICOLAS ASPROUX

Looking back on "Alien"

The majority of Hill's films revolve around man's men. Then again, Hill also co-wrote the first "Alien" (as well as the third), which means he helped create the pioneer of the blockbuster female badass, Ellen Ripley, played by Hill's "Assignment" co-star Sigourney Weaver. ("The Assignment" is surely one of the strangest movie reunions ever.)

"We thought ["Alien"] worked much stronger with a female lead— that having the alien versus a woman was a much more terrifying situation than it would have been with a big, tough, macho guy," Hill recalls.

And yet Hill hasn't been involved with the franchise since 1992's "Alien 3." His name's still on them all, including the forthcoming "Alien: Covenant," for contractual reasons.

"Most of them, I haven't read the scripts and in many cases not even seen the films," Hill remarks. "If the new one is wonderful, I'm sorry to say I had nothing to do with it. And if it's a terrible flop, it's not my fault."

Michelle Rodriguez in "The Assignment" SABAN FILMS

He's talking about it now, though, with a mixture of pride and trepidation, a little weary from being raked over the coals. He tries to choose his words carefully, but it's clear what irks him isn't an era when we're newly sensitive to trans portrayals. He's annoyed that people jumped to wild assumptions before the film was even completed.

"I think people who have not seen something and attack it — a book, a movie or whatever — that's pretty flimsy intellectual ground to be standing on," Hill says. "I don't think it's very conducive to brilliant dialogue on the subject. It doesn't open up an interesting debate to me.

"I'm not a comfortable polemicist by nature. I'm a storyteller and a movie guy," he says.

If "The Assignment" is critical of anything, it's of masculinity, with Frank suddenly the recipient of physical and sexual abuse by the lesser gender.

"One of the reasons I wanted to do this thing is I got tired of everybody telling me I was really good with guys and macho bulls—," explains Hill. "I always said my movies were anti-macho, but nobody ever noticed it."

5 Easter table decor ideas for the DIY fiend

Table name cards in the shapes of (pastel) eggs are an easy and festive idea. ISTOCK

It's time to get your home picture perfect to celebrate the holidays.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
@rachaelclemz
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

Easter is nearly here.

Oh, you've procrastinated? No big. We scoured the web for the easiest, most festive DIYs. Here are five Easter hacks from our favorite design bloggers: It's easier than you think to have an Instagram Explore page-worthy dining room. Head to the individual blogs for step-by-step instructions.

A bright centerpiece

The key to an unforgettable tablescape is a welcoming centerpiece, like the Balloon Easter Egg from Oh Happy Day. The materials are simple — you just need balloons, washi tape and scissors. They're versatile, too: You can arrange them down the center of your table or hang them on your walls or ceilings. ohhappyday.com

Use greenery to celebrate spring

Angie Chang from Chairs and Cups suggests sticking to a few colors to keep a cohesive look. Garlands are a no-fuss way to bring a little spring to your Easter table. Simply wrap clusters of greenery — seeded eucalyptus and lemon leaf work great — around a floral wire. Next, pick one or two flowers to bring out your accent color, and a third in a similar hue for a pop. Voilà! chairsandcups.com

Set the table with a little imagination

Here's Easter decoration gone Scandinavian for you less-proactive decorators: Tie rabbit ears around your Easter eggs. Frida Ramstedt at Trendenser notes you only need linen napkins, hemp rope and, of course, an egg or two. trendenser.com

Include a delicate ombre touch

Dip-dyed napkins? Yes, please. Blogger Darling has the perfect Easter hack: You'll need two dye colors, a set of cotton or linen napkins, two containers for dipping and rubber gloves. darlingmagazine.com

A minimalist twist on the Easter egg classic

No Easter is complete without dedicating plenty of time to decorating eggs. But Camille Styles' minimalist cement Easter eggs are a crafter's dream. Using eggs as mold, this DIY is easy and quick to make. Plus, they're reusable. You'll need drained eggs, a plastic container, a stick, a craft knife and, Rockite expansion cement (available at Amazon, or your local hardware store). Pro tip: You can add a bit of gold spray paint if you're feeling fancy. camillestyles.com

Stanley Cup playoffs predictions

A glance at who we expect to still be standing in June.

JOE PANTORNO
@joepantorno
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

We like Nicklas Backstrom and the Capitals to raise Lord Stanley's Cup in June. GETTY IMAGES

The NHL's Stanley Cup playoffs are the modern-day version of an ancient Greek epic.

It's a long, narrative story filled with heroes, most of the time bearded ones - who fight grueling battle upon grueling battle to reach the peak of hockey immortality that is Lord Stanley's Cup. Wednesday adds another chapter to this athletic epic as 16 teams set forth to win the honor of seeing their names engraved on one of the most famous trophies in the world.

For the casual viewer or for the fan just being introduced to this version of poetry in motion, below provides a quick crash course into this year's NHL postseason:

BEST FIRST-ROUND SERIES

San Jose Sharks vs. Edmonton Oilers

In terms of rivalries, this matchup does not jump off the page despite these two finishing just four points apart in the Western Conference's Pacific Division.

In fact, these two teams have played each other just once in the postseason and that was 11 years ago. Edmonton prevailed in the Western Conference semifinals in six games on their way to a Stanley Cup Final appearance, which they lost to the Carolina Hurricanes.

The Oilers have been irrelevant ever since, failing to make the playoffs at all. That was, until the savior came.

Edmonton captain and young gun Connor McDavid, playing in just his second NHL season, has led the Oilers to a 103-point year, their best mark since recording 106 during the 1986-87 season.

It was the third of five Cups won over a seven-year stretch.

Back to 2016-17 and McDavid has Oilers fans reminiscing about Wayne Gretzky as he led the league with 70 assists and 100 points. But he is just one of a multitude of talented stars on both sides of the ice.

In fact, the star power is off the charts in this series.

McDavid, Leon Draisaitl and Patrick Maroon combined for 86 goals this season while veteran Milan Lucic brings a wealth of playoff experience to this series.

Edmonton will need every bit of it as it will meet the defending Western Conference champion Sharks.

Much more seasoned compared to the Oilers, the Sharks boast one of the greatest passers of this generation in future Hall of Famer Joe Thornton, the best scoring defenseman in the league in Brent Burns and grizzled All-Stars like Joe Pavelski, Logan Couture and Patrick Marleau.

That talent and skill set up a dream for highlight seekers everywhere. Now just wait until the blood starts to boil like in any other playoff series.

DARK HORSE TO WIN THE CUP

Columbus Blue Jackets

Is it fair to label a team that recorded 108 points this season a dark horse?

Well, when you finish third in your division and 10 points behind the first-place Washington Capitals, have only made two postseason appearances and never won a playoff series in your first 15 years, then yes.

That's exactly what the Columbus Blue Jackets are, especially in a first-round series against the defending Stanley Cup champion Pittsburgh Penguins.

The Blue Jackets are as well-rounded a team as you can find in the NHL, though, and it all starts from the back.

Columbus allowed the second-least amount of goals behind the Capitals with just 195. Goaltender Sergei Bobrovksy should be the frontrunner for the Vezina this season with a 41-17-5 record and a goals against average of just 2.06.

The defense in front of him is even more solid. Remarkably, not one of the 10 blue liners that dressed for the Blue Jackets this season had a plus/minus rating in the red.

On the offensive end, Cam Atkinson continues to develop into a premier scorer with a career-high 35 goals this year while Nick Foligno (26) and Brandon Saad (24) provide solid secondary scoring.

Key for Bruins: solve Anderson

The Bruins and Senators begin their seven-game series in Ottawa tonight (7 p.m., NESN). Sens goaltender Craig Anderson will be the most important player in the series as the Bruins must have better success against him than they've had recently. In his last seven starts against Boston, Anderson is 6-1-0 with a 2.10 GAA and a .932 save percentage.
